Overall, this essay is very well thought out and follows the rubric very well. The only big categories of changes I really recommend below are formatting and word choice, which is completely normal for a rough draft to not be perfect. I also recommend below one paragraph that I could see you could strengthen a little bit.

Intro
- In the last sentence of the paragraph I would replace "eventually" with something like "Lastly". I think a word like "lastly" makes the essay feel more structured and formal to the reader.
- The length of the introduction is perfect and introduces the topic well to lead to the arguments below.

Body Paragraphs
- In the first body paragraph, you talk about how two strengths in one paragraph: LLMs can compile lots of information, and their potential to enhance learning. I would recommend that you split these paragraphs into 2 separate bodies, just for clearer organization
- The "strengths of LLMs" paragraph has strong arguments, however I would recommend reinforcing your arguments with quotes from reliable sources or by conducting an experiment with ChatGPT yourself. This just provides some extra "meat" to the argument, and you do this very well with the weakness paragraphs.
- In your second body paragraph, I would fix the wording on your intro sentence. Right now you say "on the other hand" and jump right to introducing a weakness. I would recommend in the first sentence just say there are weaknesses, and start introducing the specific weakness in the second sentence.
- The personal plan and the ways in which you think it will change the writing process were both very thoughtful and I could tell lots of effort was put into writing these.

Conclusion/ "Where is AI Going"
- I really like the questions at the end of this paragraph, because the future is truly an unknown and AI is developing so rapidly that we just have to see what happens

Citations/Formatting
- The citations look to be in correct MLA format, as does the document.
- The super small tweak I would say to do is add your name above the title, as in correct MLA format that is required.
- Also, add page numbers to the top right corner, as usually that is required as well.
- I am pretty sure based on the instructions that you need to use a separate "end notes" section when citing ChatGPT, and there you need to quote the prompts you gave it to produce the response you used in your essay. Right now ChatGPT is just cited in the Works Cited page. Take this with a grain of salt because I'm not 100% confident on this, it just looked like that was what you needed to do according to the instructions.
